The "too big to fail" (TBTF) theory asserts that certain corporations, particularly financial institutions, are so large and so interconnected that their failure would be disastrous to the greater economic system, and that they therefore must be supported by government when they face potential failure.

~~Too big to fail~~—Wikipedia

Too big to fail is a phrase used to describe a company that's so entwined in the global economy that its failure would be catastrophic. Big doesn't refer to the size of the company, but rather it's involvement across multiple economies. Former President George W. Bush's administration popularized "too big to fail" during the 2008 financial crisis.

The very concept of too big to fail rests on the idea of coercive wealth redistribution by the state. Such power is the power to destroy. The problem is this: to get people to act like the People will take a lot of failures of very large banks. The big banks will fight this outcome. The FED will fight on their behalf.

"Too big to fail" was a mistake because it bailed out incompetent firms during the global financial crisis. Breaking up big firms today would also be a mistake and would lead to higher prices, less innovation, and more cronyism. Innovation through entrepreneurship is the wellspring of economic growth and individual prosperity in this country.
